Community Kitchen Facilities in Minneapolis

If you don't have a kitchen that meets your needs, check this list for a community kitchen you may be able to use.

To help Minneapolis residents and business owners work with local foods and be part of a food community, the City of Minneapolis has identified community kitchens where people may:

- Prepare food for their own use or for a small business they'd like to start.
- Can or preserve food for storage.
- Teach or learn about food and cooking.

Who uses community kitchens?

Small business owners who process their own food products, run catering companies, or teach cooking classes;

Individuals or community groups who process garden or farmers' market produce, run classes, or hold other events; and

Anyone who needs a large, well-equipped, affordable kitchen space!

I want to use a community kitchen. What should I do?

If you want to use a kitchen for personal use, find the closest one on this list and give them a call. If you have other schools, parks, churches, or organizations in your neighborhood, you could try them too.

For business uses, calling 311 or visiting www.minneapolismn.gov/mdr/ for assistance from Minneapolis Development Review is a great way to start.

What is the "Pickle Bill"

The "Pickle Bill" allows an individual who pickles or cans certain foods at home (or in a community kitchen!) to sell up to $5,000 per year of product at farmers' markets and social and community events.

For more information

For more information please view the Minnesota Department of Agriculture's Pickle Bill Fact Sheet at www.mda.state.mn.us/en/food/safety/minn-food-code-fact-sheets/pickle-bill.aspx

Most park kitchens are free for nonprofit and government use and up to $35 an hour for private use.
