Background/Analysis:

In 2015 Creative City Road Map work groups have been meeting to continue their work contributing to the Creative City Road Map planning process. Work groups (made up of 120-members, including City staff, system partners, creative organizations, and individual artists) provide input on Creative City Road Map goals and objectives. Meetings are held at locations around Minneapolis that have an arts, culture, or creative economy connection. The final work group meeting is planned to be at Public Functionary, a non-profit contemporary art exhibition and social space that exists to serve and inspire the Twin Cities creative community. The purpose of the September 17 work group meeting is to review the draft Creative City Road Map; the September meeting will also be a public open house.

The Creative City Road Map planning process will result in the Creative City Road Map, a 10 year vision of the city's arts, culture and the creative economy. The Road Map will define a vision for the future of arts, culture and creative economy development in the city of Minneapolis.
