

1. It is imperative that City initiatives are designed to keep our children, families, and community safe. This imperative extends beyond Public Safety to public health. Therefore we must ensure that any new technologies do not pose health risks to our residents, businesses and visitors.
2. Our contract negotiations should ensure that a range of broadband services are offered at affordable price points for all segments of our community.
3. As we explore the use of advanced technologies, we must remain mindful of protecting civil liberties. Our residents, businesses and visitors want to feel safe throughout City of Minneapolis, but they also want to live their individual lives free from an intrusive government.
4. Wherever possible, we should leverage our tremendous capabilities and strengths. It is important that we work closely with our Library, School and Parks Boards to ensure we bring as much benefit to them as possible and draw from them every advantage to address community needs.
5. The wireless broadband program is a good thing and we should be proud of the City's leadership in pursuing strategies that help us to be more effective, efficient and socially inclusive.
6. Local government needs to recognize the advantages of connecting with its constituents. It's a two way street and not limited to creating improved ways for constituents to access government. There is benefit for government in effectively accessing community members.
