Summary of Results

Survey Background and Purpose

- The City of Minneapolis contracted with National Research Center, Inc. (NRC) to conduct a citywide resident survey. The Minneapolis Resident Survey provides residents the opportunity to rate the quality of life in the city, as well as service delivery and their satisfaction with local government. The survey also permits residents to provide feedback to government on what is working well and what is not, and to share their priorities for community planning and resource allocation.
- Resident perspectives are key in providing context that will be used by the City of Minneapolis to assess trends in its performance.
- This is the fifth iteration of the Minneapolis Resident Survey since the baseline study conducted in 2001. This is the third iteration conducted by NRC.

Methods

- The Minneapolis Resident Survey was administered by phone to a representative sample of Minneapolis residents from February 1, 2011 to March 10, 2011. A total of 1,172 surveys were completed. About a quarter of the interviews were completed with people of color, about a quarter with cell phone users and at least 95 interviews were completed with respondents in each of the 11 community planning districts. Nineteen interviews were completed in a language other than English. The overall response rate was 23%.
- Survey results were weighted so that respondent age, gender, ethnicity, ownership status (rent vs. own) and location of residence (community planning district) were represented as closely as possible to the proportions reflective of the entire city. (For more information see Appendix IV: Detailed Survey Methodology.) The margin of error is plus or minus three percentage points around any given percent.
- For comparisons by survey year, the margin of error is plus or minus four percentage points around any given percentage point.

Summary of Findings

Quality of Life and Community

A majority of residents continue to rate Minneapolis and their neighborhoods as “good” or “very good” places to live, with ratings similar to or higher than ratings in jurisdictions across the country and when compared to a select list of cities².

- Respondents who reported living in the Near North community planning district were less likely to give positive ratings for Minneapolis as a place to live than were other residents. When asked to rate their neighborhood as a place to live, Camden, Near North and Phillips residents tended to give less positive ratings than those living in other areas of the city.
- Younger women respondents, residents of color, those of Latino/Hispanic origin, renters and lower income residents tended to give lower quality of life ratings than did their counterparts.

² Ann Arbor, MI; Austin, TX; Boulder, CO; Charlotte, NC; Denver, CO (City and County); Durham, NC; Oklahoma City, OK; Phoenix, AZ; Portland, OR; San Francisco, CA.

The top three unprompted answers most frequently given by 2011 respondents about the three biggest challenges Minneapolis will face in the next five years were: education (35%); public safety (28%); and maintaining public infrastructure (23%). Other responses, mentioned by about one in five respondents, were: property and real estate taxes; job opportunities; economic development; and transportation related issues.

Survey participants were asked the extent to which they agreed or disagreed with two statements about the City. Almost all respondents agreed or strongly agreed that they are proud to live in the City of Minneapolis and would recommend it as a great place to live; at least two in five reported strong agreement with each of these statements. Few, if any, respondents strongly disagreed with either statement.

Neighborhood Perception & Image

A strong majority respondents agreed that their neighborhood is a safe place to live (84% “agreed” or “strongly agreed”); their neighborhood is clean and well maintained (83%); street lighting in their neighborhood is adequate (82%); people in their neighborhood look out for one another (80%); and that their neighborhood has a good selection of stores and services that meet their needs (76%). These ratings have steadily increased or remained stable over time. Perception of neighborhood safety was much below the national average.

- Camden, Central, Near North and Phillips residents tended to report less positive neighborhood perception and image ratings than did residents living in other districts.
- Younger females, residents of color, Latino/Hispanic residents, renters and low income residents were less likely to agree with each statement, while respondents who reported living in Minneapolis for more than 20 years were more likely to agree.

About 7 in 10 (72%) felt that their current residence was just the right size, 21% said it was too small or much too small and 6% said it was too big. No respondents thought their current place of residence was much too big. Responses to this question have remained stable over time.

Most respondents agreed that the location of their home is convenient for the household’s needs; that the physical condition of their house was adequate; and that their housing costs were affordable and within the household’s budget. About a third of respondents (35%) reported they intend to move within the next two years, down from 41% in 2005.

- Near North residents were less likely than other residents to agree that their housing costs were affordable or that the location of their home was convenient for their needs and reported a higher likelihood of moving within the next two years when compared to responses from other residents.
- Younger respondents, respondents of color, renters and lower income residents said they were more likely to move in the next two years than other residents.

Downtown Usage & Image

Downtown Use

The 76% of respondents who said they do not live or work Downtown were asked how often, if ever, they visited the Downtown area in the last year. About 9 in 10 of those respondents said they had visited the Downtown area at least once in the last year, similar to previous years’ reports. Few (6%) reported never visiting the area in the last year.

Of those who rarely or never visit Downtown Minneapolis (17%), about a quarter said it was “just don’t want to go Downtown.” Other common answers were related to a lack of parking (17%), having nowhere to go (15%), traffic congestion (12%) and the cost of parking (11%).

Downtown Safety

Almost all (93%) reported that they felt “somewhat” or “very” safe in Downtown Minneapolis; these positive ratings have improved over time and were much higher than the national average for perception of Downtown safety.

Access to Information

About two-thirds of 2011 respondents reported at least some familiarity with Minneapolis 311 services, up from 59% in 2008.

- Younger residents (ages 18-34), residents of color, those of reporting a shorter length of residency (less than 5 years), renters and low income residents tended to be less familiar with Minneapolis 311.

A slightly higher proportion of respondents in 2011 than in 2008 reported contacting the City. Those who mentioned having contacted the City in the last 12 months were asked to indicate, in an open-ended question format, how they contacted the City. About 8 in 10 respondents reported using telephone to contact the City (40% of whom contacted the City using 311 services). Approximately 3 in 10 reported visiting the City’s Web site.

City Employees

Respondents who reported contacting the City in the last 12 months (except for those who only visited the City’s Web site), were asked to rate various characteristics about the City employee with which they most recently had contact. Most respondents rated each employee characteristic as “good” or “very good,” similar to 2008 reports. Ratings of employee knowledge and respectfulness have improved since 2005. When compared to the national benchmarks, ratings of City employees’ courteousness and the ease of getting in touch with the employee were below average; ratings of employees’ knowledge and timeliness were similar to national averages; and employees’ willingness to help or understand was rated higher than the national benchmark. When compared to jurisdictions in select cities³ in the database, employees’ knowledge was rated much above average.

- Respondents residing in the Central planning district, renters, lower income residents and residents of color were least likely to give positive employee ratings than were their counterparts.

City Web Site

Respondents who reported only contacting the City via the City’s Web site were asked to rate specific characteristics of the Web site. A majority of respondents reported that the usefulness of information, the design and graphics used and the convenience of the City’s Web site were good or very good (76%, 73% and 73%, respectively). Ratings for the design and graphics used on the City’s Web site and the usefulness of information on the site declined slightly over time, while ratings of the convenience of the Web site showed an upward trend across survey years.

Snow Emergency Information

Nearly half of residents reported relying on the automated phone call from the city when a snow emergency is declared and about a quarter refer to radio or television for this information. A mixed bag of information sources was used by Minneapolis residents for understanding snow emergency rules: City of Minneapolis Web site (17%), radio or television (13%), the 348-snow phone hotline (13%) were sources most commonly mentioned.

Emergency Services

Residents responding to the survey were asked if they had any contact with emergency services in the past two years. At least a third of respondents reported that they had contacted the police (38%), 911 operators (32%) and 311 agents (36%), while 13% reported having contacted the fire department in the last two years.

Those who reported having contacted an emergency service in the past two years were asked to rate their satisfaction with the professionalism shown by the staff with which they had contact. Most respondents reported that they were satisfied or very satisfied with the professionalism shown by Fire Department staff (96%), 911 operators (94%), 311 agents (96%) and Police Department staff (83%), similar to or higher than in 2008. Satisfaction ratings for Fire Department staff and Police Department staff were much below the national average.

Satisfaction with Public Education in Minneapolis

While 54% of respondents reported satisfaction with public education in Minneapolis, 46% thought it had declined in the two years prior to the 2011 survey administration. Almost equal proportions were very satisfied and very dissatisfied. About a third thought public education had remained the same over the last two years, while a quarter thought it had improved and two in five thought it had declined. About three times as many respondents thought it had declined a lot as opposed to those who felt it had improved a lot (13% versus 4%).

- Residents living in the Central community planning district were less satisfied with public education in Minneapolis than were those living in other areas of the city.
- Home-owners were less satisfied with public education in the city than were renters.

City Services

Satisfaction with City Services

Survey participants were read a list of services provided by the City of Minneapolis government and asked to rate their level of satisfaction or dissatisfaction with each. At least half of all respondents said that they were satisfied or very satisfied with each service from the list of services provided by the City of Minneapolis, except for street repair (40% gave positive ratings).

- When comparing results by community planning district, Near North residents tended to give lower satisfaction ratings than did respondents living in other districts, except for ratings of drinking water.
- People of color and renters were less likely to give high marks to City services when asked to rate their satisfaction with each service than were other residents.

In general, quality ratings of Minneapolis City services remained stable or showed improvement from 2008 to 2011.

Twelve of 20 services were compared to National Research Center's national database. One service (affordable housing development) received ratings that were much higher than the national average; two services (providing park and recreation services and animal control services) received ratings similar to the national benchmark; ratings for keeping streets clean were lower than the national average; and eight services were rated much below the national benchmark. Six of the 20 services were compared to select cities⁴ from NRC's database. Keeping streets clean and animal control services were rated similarly to ratings given in select cities and four services received ratings much below the select cities average.

Prioritization of City Services

After rating their satisfaction with City services, residents were asked to rate the importance of each service using a 5-point scale with 5 representing "extremely important" and 1 equaling "not at all important." At the top of the list were: fire protection and emergency medical response (78% rating as extremely important), providing quality drinking water (69%) and police services (66%). Despite the change in some importance ratings, the rank order of service importance was largely the same in 2011 and 2008.

Balancing Satisfaction and Priorities

Most government services are considered to be important, but when competition for limited resources demands that efficiencies or cutbacks be instituted, it is wise not only to know what services are deemed most important to residents' satisfaction, but which services among the most important are perceived to be delivered with the lowest quality.

As is found in many jurisdictions, the services identified by Minneapolis residents as the most important were the core health and safety services such as police, fire, trash collection and drinking water. Because these services tend to be considered the most important everywhere in the U.S., it can be especially illuminating to dig deeper, to identify services that are the best predictors of whether residents would support a tax increase to maintain or improve services. NRC performed a Key Driver Analysis (KDA) which measures the strength of the relationship between service ratings and willingness to support a tax increase. The services most closely related to that willingness to pay are considered key drivers. The residents who gave higher ratings to the key drivers were more likely to support a tax increase to maintain or improve services, but those who gave lower ratings to the key drivers were less likely to support a tax increase to maintain or improve services. The key drivers for Minneapolis were: snow removal, street repair and providing parks and recreation services.

Not only are some "important" services more essential targets for study or improvement – the key drivers – but the ratings of some important services tend always to be better than the ratings of others – irrespective of community. For example, fire and police ratings always receive better ratings than street repair or snow removal. To help identify where ratings are better or worse than should be expected, a comparison is made to resident ratings of those services in other locales. The higher importance services that rated lower compared to other places included: fire protection and emergency medical response, providing quality drinking water, police services, garbage collection and recycling services, snow removal and street repair.

Because snow removal and street repair were both below the benchmark and were key drivers (while the other key driver, providing parks and recreation services was similar to the benchmark) their improvement is likely the best place to focus resources to have the biggest payoff in resident willingness to pay for better or sustained service.

Community Engagement

Community Participation

As in 2008, about 9 in 10 respondents reported that they are likely to vote in the next election for mayor and city council in November 2013, with 72% in 2011 stating that they are very likely to vote.

⁴ Ann Arbor, MI; Austin, TX; Boulder, CO; Charlotte, NC; Denver (City and County), CO; Durham, NC; Oklahoma City, OK; Phoenix, AZ; Portland, OR; San Francisco, CA

Those who reported they were unlikely to vote in the next election for Mayor and City Council gave reasons such as: not having any interest, a lack of awareness on how to vote, having a belief that voting would not make a difference, or that they were too busy to vote.

The proportion of respondents reporting that they would be likely to contact an elected official was higher in 2011 than in 2008, while fewer 2011 respondents than 2008 respondents reported that they would work with a group not affiliated with the City to try to influence a City decision.

City Government Performance

At least 6 in 10 respondents gave good or very good ratings when asked to rate various aspects of Minneapolis City government and, in general, government performance ratings mostly trended upward over time.

When compared to the nation, quality ratings for providing meaningful opportunities for citizens to give input on important issues received ratings above average, while ratings for providing value for tax dollars were below the national benchmark. The overall direction that the City is taking was rated similarly to other jurisdictions across the country. The City received below average ratings when compared to select cities⁵ from the database for the overall direction the City is taking and similar ratings for the value for tax dollars paid.

- Southwest residents tended to give lower ratings when asked to rate Minneapolis City government performance than did other residents.
- Younger residents, residents of color, those reporting their ethnicity to be Latino/Hispanic and residents who own their homes were more likely to give positive ratings to Minneapolis government performance than were their counterparts.

Discrimination

Seventeen percent of respondents reported that they had experienced some type of discrimination in Minneapolis during the past 12 months, similar to previous survey years. Of those who reported experiencing discrimination, 21% reported it was in getting a job or at work, or that the situation arose in their neighborhood. Responses were generally similar to 2005 reports of discrimination. Few respondents reported that the discrimination occurred when dealing with the City.

Survey Background

Survey Purpose

The City of Minneapolis contracted with National Research Center, Inc. (NRC) to conduct a citywide resident survey. The Minneapolis Resident Survey serves as a consumer report card for Minneapolis by providing residents the opportunity to rate the quality of life in the city, as well as the community's amenities, service delivery and their satisfaction with local government. The survey also permits residents to provide feedback to government on what is working well and what is not, and to communicate their priorities for community planning and resource allocation.

The focus on the quality of service delivery and the importance of services helps council, staff and the public to set priorities for decisions and lays the groundwork for tracking community opinions about the core responsibilities of Minneapolis City government, helping to assure maximum service quality over time.

This type of survey gets at the key services that local government controls to create a quality community. It is akin to private sector customer surveys that are used regularly by many corporations to monitor where there are weaknesses in product or service delivery before customers defect to competition or before other problems from dissatisfied customers arise.

This is the fifth iteration of the Minneapolis Resident Survey since the baseline study conducted in 2001. This is the third iteration conducted by NRC.

Methods

A random digit dial sample (RDD) of Minneapolis residents was purchased for this project, where part of the sample was geocoded using reverse directory look-up to help determine in which Community Planning District potential respondents lived. Phone numbers of Minneapolis residents were randomly selected for interviewing. Phone calls were made from February 1, 2011 to March 10, 2011. A majority of the interviews was completed during the evening hours, although calls were made on the weekend and during weekdays also. All phone numbers were dialed at least eight times before replacing with another number, with at least one of the attempts on either a weekend or weekday evening.

Once interviews were completed using the RDD list, respondent address information was geocoded to determine in which of 11 community planning districts a respondent resided. Community planning districts were chosen as the geographic unit of analysis below the City level. The districts were the same geographic units selected for prior surveys. Datasets are available for a wide variety of demographics based upon the community planning districts. To complete the minimum number of responses determined for each community (95), a set of numbers was pre-coded for location and called to fill the quota for each community planning district. An additional quota system based on racial groups was used to ensure that a representative number of these populations participated in the survey. Another quota of cell phone users was implemented for this iteration and residents using Text Telephone (TTY) (use of telephones for the hearing impaired) also were dialed.

Interviewers who spoke Spanish, Vietnamese, Somali, Hmong, Lao and Oromo were available for this survey; 12 surveys were conducted in Spanish, one in Hmong, one in Vietnamese, one in Oromo and four in Somali. While interviewers were available to conduct the survey in Lao, no interviews were completed in this language. About a quarter of completed interviews were conducted with residents of color and about a quarter were completed with cell phone users. Also, while TTY capabilities were offered this year, no surveys were completed with TTY users. The overall response rate was 23%.

Understanding the Results

“Don’t Know” Responses and Rounding

On the questions in the survey, respondents could answer “don’t know.” The proportion of respondents giving this reply is shown in the full set of responses included in Appendix III: Complete Set of Frequencies. However, the “don’t know” responses have been removed from the analyses presented in the body of the report. In other words, the tables and graphs in the report body display the responses from respondents who had an opinion about a specific item. This approach to presenting data is used in order to allow the fairest comparisons across items.

Though a somewhat small percentage of respondents offer “don’t know” for most items, inevitably some items have a larger “don’t know” percentage. Comparing responses to a set of items on the same scale can be misleading when the “don’t know” responses have been left in. If two items have disparate “don’t know” percentages (2% vs. 15%, for example), any apparent similarities or differences across the remaining response options may disappear once the “don’t know” responses are removed.

Resident survey reports prior to 2005 for the City of Minneapolis have included “don’t know” responses in the report bodies. In this report, comparisons to previous data omit the “don’t know” responses.

For some questions, respondents were permitted to select multiple responses. When the total exceeds 100% in a table for a multiple response question, it is because the answers from some respondents are counted in multiple categories. When a table for a question that only permitted a single response does not total to exactly 100%, it is due to the customary practice of rounding percentages to the nearest whole number.

“Resident” and “Respondent”

As the results of the survey are intended to reflect the City of Minneapolis population as a whole, the terms “resident” and “respondent” are used interchangeably throughout this report.

Confidence Intervals

It is customary to describe the precision of estimates made from surveys by a “level of confidence” (or margin of error). The 95 percent confidence level for the survey is generally no greater than plus or minus three percentage points around any given percent reported for the entire sample (1,172 completed interviews). For each community planning district from the survey, the margin of error rises to as much as plus or minus 10% for a sample size of 95 (in the smallest district response) to plus or minus 9% for 129 completed surveys (in the largest district response). Where estimates are given for subgroups, they may be less precise. Generally the 95% confidence interval is plus or minus five percentage points for samples of about 400 to 10 percentage points for samples as small as 100. (For comparisons made across community planning districts, the margin of error is equivalent to that for the smallest group.)

Comparing Survey Results

Certain kinds of services tend to be thought better of by residents in many communities across the country. For example, public safety services tend to be received better than transportation services by residents of most American communities. Where possible, the better comparison is not from one service to another in Minneapolis, but from Minneapolis services to services like them provided by other jurisdictions. This way we can better understand if “good” is good enough for Minneapolis service evaluations.

Comparison of Results Over Time and by Subgroup

Because this survey was the fifth iteration of the resident survey, the current results are presented along with past ratings when available. For comparisons by survey year, the margin of error is plus or minus four percentage points around any given percentage point, which means that differences from 2008 to 2011 must be five percentage points or higher before they should be considered real changes in population sentiment.

Finally, selected results for all Minneapolis residents were compared to results from subgroups of the population (community planning district and sociodemographics) in Minneapolis and are presented Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.

Normative Database

National comparisons and comparisons to select cities⁶ also have been included in the report when available (jurisdictions to which Minneapolis was compared can be found in Appendix V: Jurisdictions Included in the Database). NRC has been leading the strategic use of surveys for local governments since 1991, when the principals of the company wrote the first edition of what became the classic text on resident surveying. In Resident surveys: how to do them, how to use them, what they mean, published by the International City/County Management Association (ICMA), we not only articulated the principles for quality survey methods, we pioneered both the idea of benchmark data for citizen opinion and the method for gathering benchmark data. We called it, “In Search of Standards,” and argued for norms. “What has been missing from a local government’s analysis of its survey results is the context that school administrators can supply when they tell parents how an 80 percent score on the social studies test compares to test results from other school systems...”

NRC’s database of comparative resident opinion is comprised of resident perspectives gathered in resident surveys from approximately 500 jurisdictions whose residents evaluated local government services. Conducted with typically no fewer than 400 residents in each jurisdiction, opinions are intended to represent over 30 million Americans. NRC has innovated a method for quantitatively integrating the results of surveys that we have conducted with those that others have conducted. We have described our integration methods thoroughly in Public Administration Review, Journal of Policy Analysis and Management and in our first book on conducting and using resident surveys. Scholars who specialize in the analysis of resident surveys regularly have relied on our work (e.g., Kelly, J. & Swindell, D. (2002). Service quality variation across urban space: First steps towards a model of citizen satisfaction, Journal of Urban Affairs, 24, 271-288.; Van Ryzin, G., Muzzio, D., Immerwahr, S., Gulick, L. & Martinez, E. (2004). Drivers and consequences of citizen satisfaction: An application of the American Customer Satisfaction Index Model to New York City, Public Administration Review, 64, 331-341). The method described in those publications is refined regularly and statistically tested on a growing number of resident surveys in our proprietary databases.

NRC’s work on calculating national norms for resident opinions about service delivery and quality of life won the Samuel C. May award for research excellence from the Western Governmental Research Association.

The Role of Comparisons

Normative comparisons are used for benchmarking. Jurisdictions use the comparative information to help interpret their own resident survey results, to create or revise community plans, to evaluate the success of policy or budget decisions, to measure local government performance. We don’t know what is small or large without comparing. Taking the pulse of the community has little meaning without knowing what pulse rate is too high and what is too low. When surveys of service satisfaction turn up “good” citizen evaluations, we need to know how others rate their services to understand if “good” is good enough. Furthermore, in the absence of national or peer community comparisons, a jurisdiction is left with comparing its fire protection rating to its street maintenance rating. That comparison is unfair. Streets always lose to fire. We need to ask more important and harder questions. We need to know how residents' ratings of fire service compare to opinions about fire service in other communities.

⁶ Ann Arbor, MI; Austin, TX; Boulder, CO; Charlotte, NC; Denver, CO (City and County); Durham, NC; Oklahoma City, OK; Phoenix, AZ; Portland, OR; San Francisco, CA;

Jurisdictions in the normative database are distributed geographically across the country and range from small to large in population size. Comparisons may be made to subsets of jurisdictions (within a given region or population category such as jurisdictions in the Minnesota region). Most commonly comparisons are made to all jurisdictions. In this report, comparisons were made to all jurisdictions in the database. Despite the differences in jurisdiction characteristics, all are in the business of providing local government services to residents. Though individual jurisdiction circumstances, resources and practices vary, the objective in every community is to provide services that are so timely, tailored and effective that residents conclude the services are of the highest quality. High ratings in any jurisdiction, like SAT scores in any teen household, bring pride and a sense of accomplishment.

Comparison of Minneapolis to the Normative Database

In this report, comparisons are made both to the entire database ("National Database") and a portion of the database ("Select Cities")⁷, featuring communities identified by Minneapolis, when available. Normative comparisons have been provided when similar questions on the Minneapolis survey are included in NRC's database and there are at least five jurisdictions in which the question was asked, though most questions are compared to more than five other jurisdictions across the country.

Where comparisons for quality ratings were available, the City of Minneapolis's results were generally noted as being "above" the benchmark, "below" the benchmark or "similar" to the benchmark. For some questions – those related to resident behavior, circumstance or to a local problem – the comparison to the benchmark is designated as "more," "similar" or "less" (for example, residents contacting the City in the last 12 months). In instances where ratings are considerably higher or lower than the benchmark, these ratings have been further demarcated by the attribute of "much," (for example, "much less" or "much above"). These labels come from a statistical comparison of Minneapolis's rating to the benchmark where a rating is considered "similar" if it is within the margin of error; "above," "below," "more," or "less" if the difference between Minneapolis's rating and the benchmark is greater than the margin of error; and "much above," "much below," "much more" or "much less" if the difference between Minneapolis's rating and the benchmark is more than twice the margin of error.

Report of Results

Quality of Life and Community

Survey respondents were asked to rate various aspects of quality of life in Minneapolis. When residents were asked to rate Minneapolis and their neighborhood as a place to live, a majority rated each as good or very good. About 9 in 10 thought Minneapolis was a “good” or “very good” place to live and about 8 in 10 said the same for their neighborhood as a place to live. These ratings were similar to ratings given by Minneapolis residents in previous survey years.

When compared to cities across the nation and to select cities⁸ from National Research Center’s database, quality of life ratings given by Minneapolis respondents were similar to or higher than ratings given in other jurisdictions.

Respondents who reported living in the Near North community planning district were less likely to give positive ratings for Minneapolis as a place to live than were other residents. When asked to rate their neighborhood as a place to live, Camden, Near North and Phillips residents tended to give less positive ratings than those living in other areas of the city. Younger women respondents, residents of color, those of Latino/Hispanic origin, renters and lower income residents tended to give lower quality of life ratings than did their counterparts. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

Residents responding to the survey were asked if they thought the City as a place to live had gotten better, worse or stayed about the same in the past two years. Six in ten felt that it had stayed about the same as a place to live, 18% felt it had gotten worse and 22% said it had gotten better.

Generally, these ratings have remained stable over time. However, a higher proportion of 2011 respondents felt the City had stayed about the same and fewer thought it had gotten worse than did respondents to the 2008 survey. Please note that the 2001 questionnaire asked respondents to rate the change in livability over the past three years and the more recent surveys asked to rate the past two years.

Survey participants residing in Near North were more likely to think that Minneapolis has gotten better as a place to live in the last two years than those living in other community planning districts. When compared to other residents in Minneapolis, older residents (age 55 or older) were more likely to think Minneapolis has gotten worse as a place to live in the last two years while residents of color were more likely to think it had improved over time. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

Over the past two years, do you think Minneapolis has gotten better, gotten worse, or stayed about the same as a place to live?

The 2001 questionnaire asked respondents to rate changes in livability over the past three years versus the past two years as in 2003, 2005, 2008 and 2011.

Challenges Facing the City

Survey respondents provided unprompted responses to a question about the three biggest challenges Minneapolis will face in the next five years. This was an open-ended question where respondents were able to give any answer. Many potential categories of response were available to interviewers; interviewers selected the one category that best fit each respondent's stated issue. Many respondents mentioned "other" items that could not be coded into a specific category.

The top three unprompted answers most frequently given by 2011 respondents were education (35%), public safety (28%) and maintaining public infrastructure (23%). About one in five respondents mentioned that property and real estate taxes, job opportunities, economic development and transportation related issues will be challenges for the City in the next five years.

When compared to previous years, a higher proportion of respondents in 2011 than in 2008 commented about maintaining public infrastructure, education and job opportunities as issues in Minneapolis over the next five years; a smaller proportion of respondents in 2011 than in 2008 suggested concerns about foreclosures, economic development, housing, public safety and transportation related issues. Please note that maintaining public infrastructure (including bridge and road maintenance) and foreclosures were added to the list of potential response categories in 2008. This question was added after the collapse of the I-35W Bridge in 2007.

Respondents were allowed three responses to this question, identifying the first, second and third biggest challenges that they saw facing Minneapolis. For the purpose of comparing to previous years' data, the responses for each category have been summed into a single number. Changes in response wording between survey years are as follows: "managing City government" in 2001 and 2003 versus "City government" in 2005, 2008 and 2011; "economic development - job creation/unemployment" in 2001 versus "economic development" in 2003, 2005, 2008 and 2011. "Property taxes" was added in 2011.

In 2011, the Human Resources department added a question to assess resident perceptions of living in the City. The following section addresses neighborhood perception and image.

Survey participants were asked the extent to which they agreed or disagreed with two statements about the City. Almost all respondents agreed or strongly agreed that they are proud to live in the City of Minneapolis and would recommend it as a great place to live; at least two in five reported strong agreement with each of these statements. Few, if any, respondents strongly disagreed with either statement.

Residents were asked the extent to which they agreed or disagreed with various positive statements about their neighborhood. At least three-quarters of respondents said they agreed or strongly agreed with each statement; at least one in five was in strong agreement. These ratings have steadily increased or remained stable over time.

When compared to jurisdictions across the nation, perception of neighborhood safety was much below average. National comparisons for other neighborhood qualities were not available. Comparisons to select cities⁹ from the database also were not available.

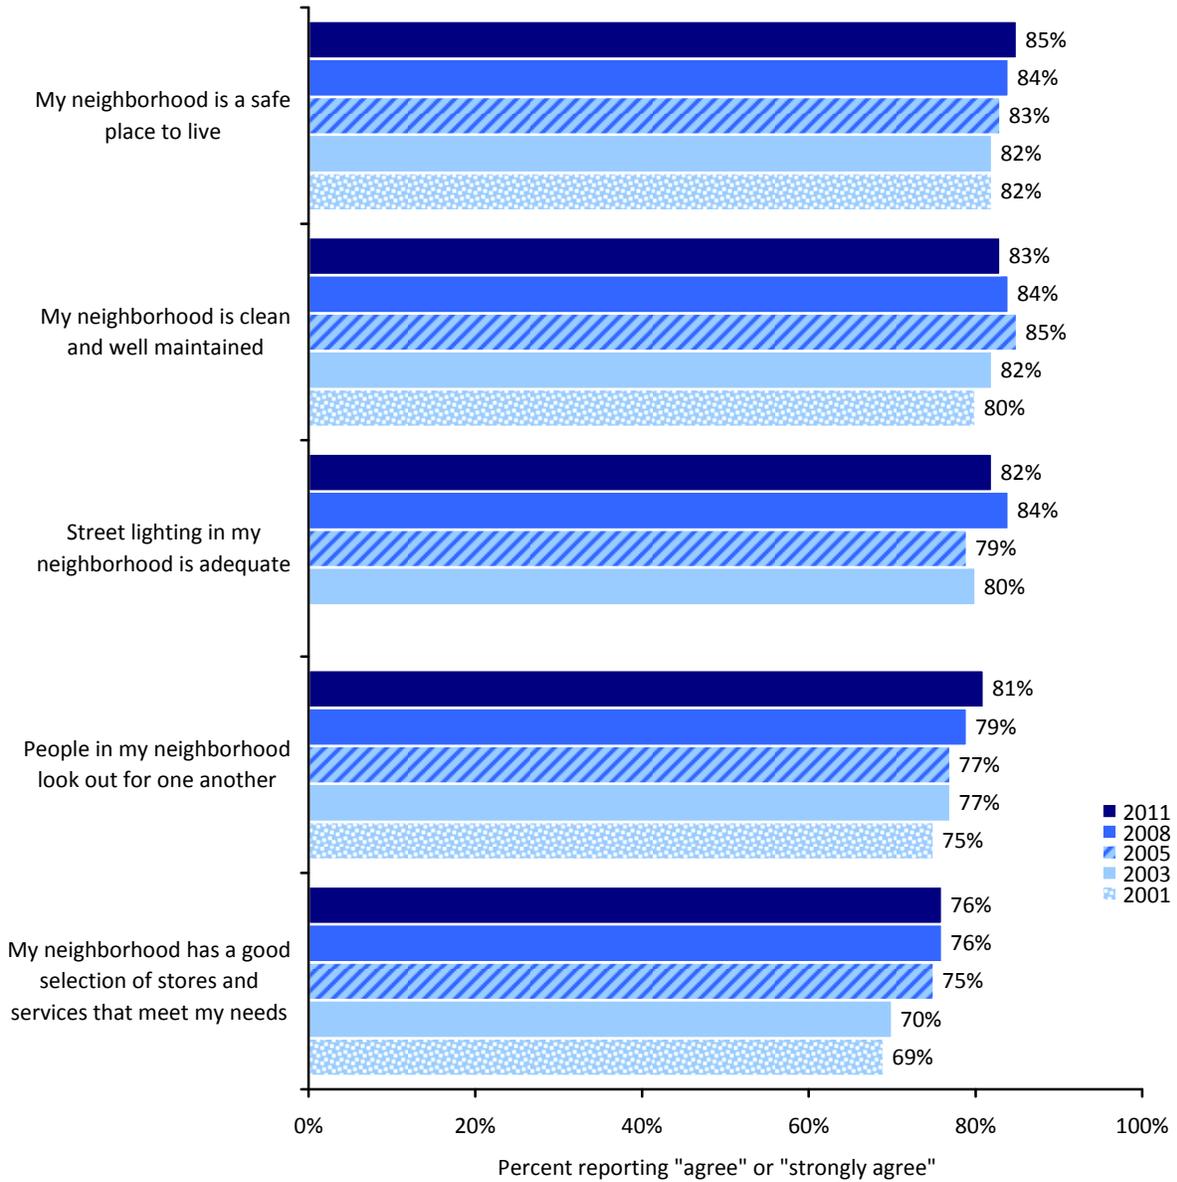

Camden, Central, Near North and Phillips residents tended to report less positive neighborhood perception and image ratings than did residents living in other districts. Younger females, residents of color, Latino/Hispanic residents, renters and low income residents were less likely to agree with each statement, while respondents who reported living in Minneapolis for more than 20 years were more likely to agree. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

"Street lighting in my neighborhood is adequate" was not asked in 2001.

Survey respondents were asked how they felt about the size of their current place of residence based on their household's needs. About 7 in 10 (72%) felt that their current residence was just the right size, 21% said it was too small or much too small and 6% said it was too big. No respondents thought their current place of residence was much too big. Responses to this question have remained stable over time.

Which of the following best describes the size of your current place of residence based on your household's needs?

This question was not asked in 2003 or 2001.

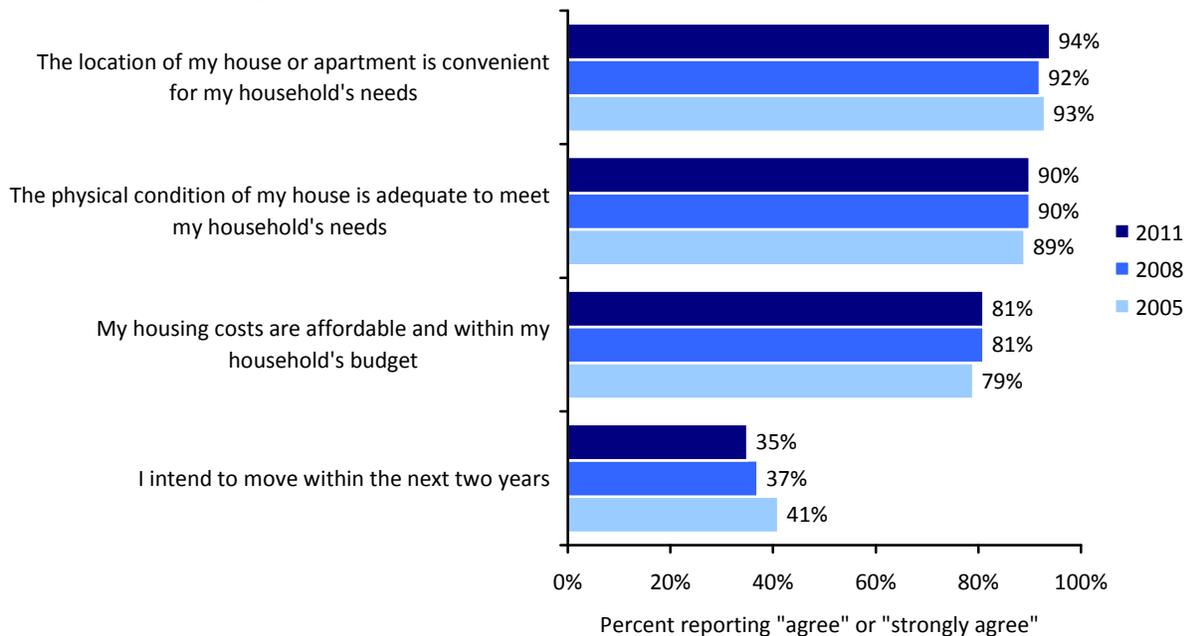

A related question asked Minneapolis residents to indicate the extent to which they agreed or disagreed with statements about their current place of residence. Almost all respondents agreed that the location of their home is convenient for the household’s needs. Nine in ten respondents felt similarly that the physical condition of their house was adequate. Eight in ten agreed that their housing costs were affordable and within the household’s budget. About a third of respondents (35%) reported they intend to move within the next two years, down from 41% in 2005.

Near North residents were less likely than other residents to agree that their housing costs were affordable or that the location of their home was convenient for their needs and reported a higher likelihood of moving within the next two years when compared to responses from other residents. Comparing sociodemographics, younger respondents, respondents of color, renters and lower income residents said they were more likely to move in the next two years than other residents. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

This question was not asked in 2003 or 2001.

Follow-up questions were asked of those respondents who are likely to move within the next two years. Of the 10% of respondents who strongly agreed that they intend to so, about one in five said they would either move out of state, to another neighborhood in Minneapolis or to another location within the same neighborhood. Another 18% said they would move outside the Minneapolis metro area and 16% reported they would move outside Minneapolis, but within the metro area.

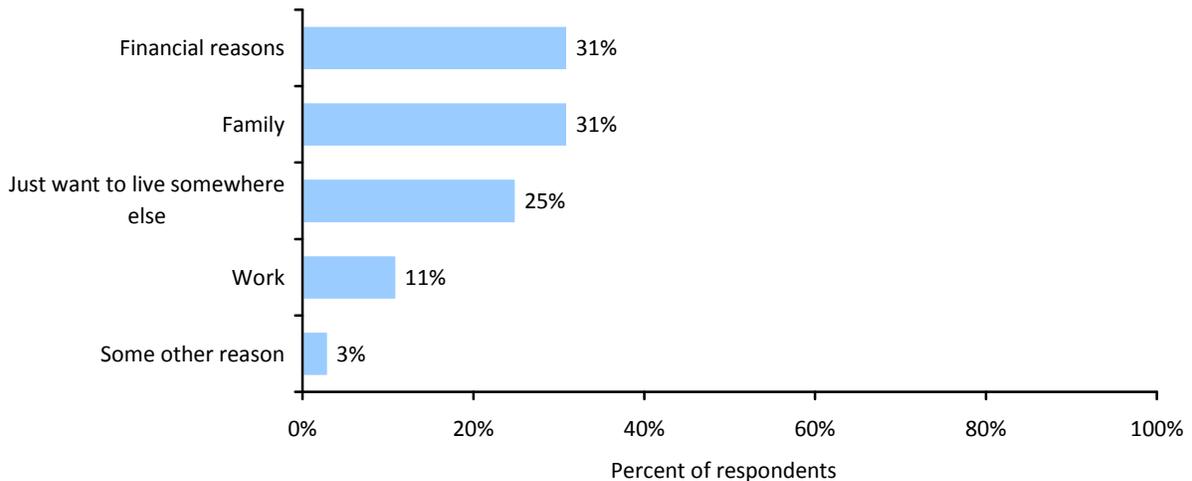

When asked why they intend to move, about 3 in 10 mentioned financial reasons (31%) or family (31%). About a quarter reported that they just want to live somewhere else.

Downtown Usage & Image

Downtown Use

The survey instrument asked a series of questions about residents' use and perceptions of Downtown Minneapolis.

A majority of respondents (76%) reported they neither live nor work in Downtown Minneapolis, similar to 2008 and 2005. A similar proportion of respondents to the 2011 survey reported living or working in Downtown Minneapolis when compared to 2008 results.

In 2001, respondents were only asked if they work Downtown. In this instance, "no" is equivalent to "neither." If respondents reported that they did not live or work Downtown, they were asked how frequently they visited the area in the last year.

Respondents who said they do not live or work Downtown (N=867) were asked how often, if ever, they visited the Downtown area in the last year. About 9 in 10 respondents (94%) said they had visited the Downtown area at least once in the last year, similar to previous years' reports. About two in five (39%) reported visiting 26 times or more. About a quarter said they had visited Downtown Minneapolis 3 to 12 times in the past year, while 16% said they had visited 13 to 26 times and 11% reported visiting once or twice in the last year. Six percent reported never visiting the area in the last year. The percentage of respondents who have visited Downtown Minneapolis has remained stable over time.

The 2011, 2008, 2005 and 2003 questionnaire asked this question of only those people who did not live or work Downtown. The 2001 questionnaire asked this question only of people who did work Downtown. The 2001 and 2003 questionnaires contained more response options than the 2005, 2008 and 2011 surveys.

The 17% of respondents (N=199) who reported never going Downtown or only going once or twice in the last year were asked to give major reasons that kept them from spending more time in the Downtown area. This was an open-ended question where respondents were able to give any answer. Many potential categories of response were available to interviewers; they selected the one that best fit each respondent’s stated response. Many respondents mentioned “other” items that could not be coded into a specific category. In addition to the 25% of respondents stating that they “just don’t want to go Downtown,” other common answers were related to a lack of parking (17%), having nowhere to go (15%), traffic congestion (12%) and the cost of parking (11%).

Comparisons to answers given to this question in previous years appear in the table on the following page. Some categories were combined in previous survey years or not recorded by interviewers in previous years. Safety issues appeared to be less of a deterrent in 2011 compared to 2008.

Total may exceed 100% as respondents were able to choose more than one response.
 This question was asked only of those who reported going Downtown twice or less in the last year.
 “Other” responses were not recorded and not available for analysis.

Some categories were combined or categorized slightly differently in 2003 and 2001. Comparisons are of the closest matches to data from those years.

Downtown Safety

Survey respondents were asked to rate how safe they felt in Downtown Minneapolis, in general. Almost all (93%) reported that that they felt “somewhat” or “very” safe in Downtown Minneapolis, 6% said “not very safe” and 1% said “not at all safe.” These positive ratings were much higher than the national average for perception of Downtown safety. Perceptions of Downtown safety in Minneapolis have improved over time.

The 2001 survey asked respondents how safe they felt walking through Downtown during evening hours; the 2011, 2008 and 2005 surveys asked how safe they felt in Downtown Minneapolis. This question was not asked on the 2003 survey.

Access to Information

When asked how familiar they were with Minneapolis 311, about two-thirds of 2011 respondents reported at least some familiarity, up from 59% in 2008. A third said they were not at all familiar with Minneapolis 311.

Respondents were asked if they had contacted the City to get information or services in the last 12 months. A slightly higher proportion of respondents in 2011 than in 2008 (44% and 39%, respectively) reported contacting the City. Contact with the City was similar to contact reports given in other jurisdictions throughout the nation.

Younger residents (ages 18-34), residents of color, those of reporting a shorter length of residency (less than 5 years), renters and low income residents tended to be less familiar with Minneapolis 311. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

Respondents who mentioned having contacted the City in the last 12 months were asked to indicate, in an open-ended question format, how they contacted the City. About 8 in 10 respondents reported using telephone to contact the City (40% of whom contacted the City using 311 services). Approximately 3 in 10 reported visiting the City’s Web site. Few respondents reported using mail or other methods to contact the City (1% and 2%, respectively).

City Employees

Respondents who reported contacting the City in the last 12 months (except for those who only visited the City’s Web site), were asked to rate various characteristics about the City employee with which they most recently had contact. At least a third of respondents rated each employee characteristic as very good. About 9 in 10 respondents felt that employee respectfulness and courteousness was good or better. Eighty-six percent of residents rated employees’ knowledge as good or very good. Employees’ willingness to help or understand, timeliness, their willingness to accommodate the need for foreign language and/or sign language interpreting and the ease of getting in touch with the employee were rated as good or better by approximately 8 in 10 respondents. Please note that 71%% of respondents said “don’t know” when asked to rate the quality of the City employees’ willingness to accommodate the need for foreign language and/or sign language interpreting. The complete set of frequencies for this question can be found in Appendix III: Complete Set of Frequencies. These ratings were similar to 2008 reports and ratings of knowledge and respectfulness showed an upward trend since 2005.

Ratings of City employees’ courteousness and ease of getting in touch with the employee were below the national average. Ratings of employees’ knowledge and timeliness were similar to national averages. Employees’ willingness to help or understand was rated higher than the national benchmark. When compared to jurisdictions in select cities¹⁰ in the database, employees’ knowledge was rated much above average. Comparisons were not available for all characteristics, particularly for the select cities comparisons.

Respondents residing in the Central planning district, renters, lower income residents and residents of color were least likely to give positive employee ratings than were their counterparts. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

Percent reporting “good” or “very good”

This question was only asked of respondents who had contacted the City in the last 12 months via a method other than email. Question wording differed slightly for “ease of getting in touch” and “willingness to help or understand” on the 2001 and 2003 questionnaires where the questions asked how satisfied respondents were with the time it took to reach the right person and how satisfied respondents were with the helpfulness of the City employee. The scale used in 2001 was: satisfied, very satisfied, dissatisfied, very dissatisfied; the scale used in 2003 was yes or no when asked if they were satisfied with the characteristic of the contact..

City staff were interested in the increase in the proportion of respondents giving fair and poor ratings in 2005 for “ease of getting in touch” with City employees. A comparison of the full set of frequencies (not including “don’t know” responses) over time is shown in the table below. As shown, the proportion of respondents giving “fair” and “poor” ratings has decreased from 2005 and the proportion giving “very good” ratings has increased from 2005. When comparing 2008 and 2011 responses, ratings are similar.

City staff also wanted to know how ratings for “ease of getting in touch” with City employees differed between residents who had contacted the City using 311 and those who had not contacted the City via the 311 contact method. As shown in the following table, those who had not contacted the City using the 311 service were more likely to give “poor” ratings for the ease of getting in touch with the City employee with which they most recently had contact, while those who had used the 311 contact method were more likely to give a rating of “very good.”

City Web Site

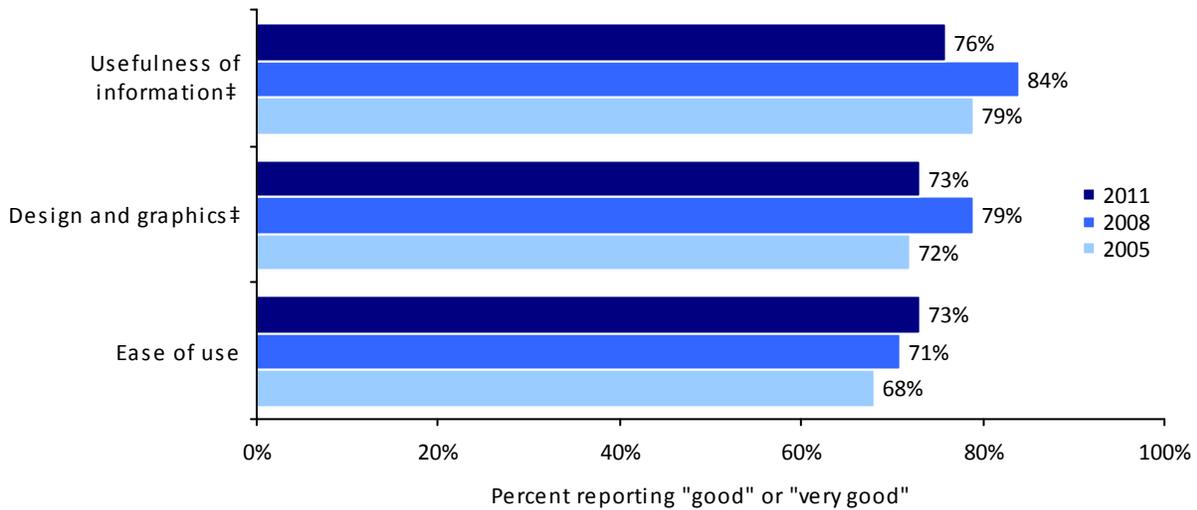

Respondents who reported only contacting the City via the City’s Web site (N=186) were asked to rate specific characteristics of the Web site. Approximately three-quarters of respondents reported that the usefulness of information, the design and graphics used and the convenience of the City’s Web site were good or very good (76%, 73% and 73%, respectively). Ratings for the design and graphics used on the City’s Web site decreased from 84% rating as good or better in 2008 to 76% in 2011; usefulness of information also declined over time (79% in 2008 versus 73% in 2011). Ratings of the convenience of the Web site show an upward trend over time.

Snow Emergency Information

In the past, one unprompted, open-ended question was included on the survey to obtain information about how Minneapolis residents get snow emergency information. In the current iteration of the survey, City staff chose to ask two questions: 1) to find out what information source residents use to determine whether or not a snow emergency has been declared and 2) to find out the source of information residents use to understand snow emergency rules and to know where to park during a snow emergency.

Nearly half of residents reported relying on the automated phone call from the city when a snow emergency is declared and about a quarter refer to radio or television for this information. Fewer than 10% of respondents mentioned various other information sources. A mixed bag of information sources was used by Minneapolis residents for understanding snow emergency rules; City of Minneapolis Web site (17%), radio or television (13%), the 348-snow phone hotline (13%) were sources most commonly mentioned.

Emergency Services

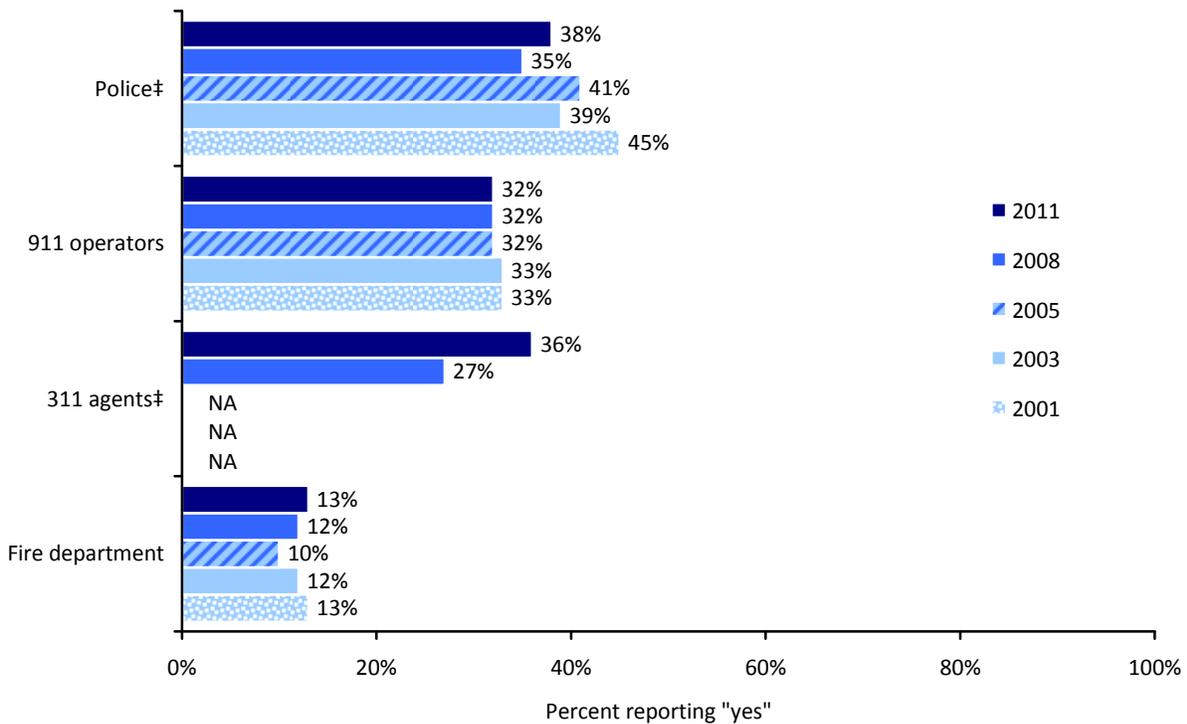

Residents responding to the survey were asked if they had any contact with emergency services in the past two years. At least a third of respondents reported that they had contacted the police (38%), 911 operators (32%) and 311 agents (36%) in the last two years; 13% reported having contacted the fire department.

Results generally remained stable, except that resident contact with 311 agents rose by 9% from 2008 to 2011 (27% and 36%, respectively). Residents were first asked about their contact with 311 agents in 2008.

This question was only asked of respondents who had any contact with emergency services in the past two years.

This question was not asked in 2003 or 2001 and 2008 was the first year to include "311 agents."

Respondents who reported having contacted an emergency service in the past two years were asked to rate their satisfaction with the professionalism shown by the staff with which they had contact. Nearly all respondents reported that they were satisfied or very satisfied with the professionalism shown by Fire Department staff (96%), 911 operators (94%) and 311 agents (96%). About 8 in 10 respondents (83%) reported satisfaction with Police Department staff with which they had contact.

Satisfaction ratings for Fire Department staff and Police Department staff were much below the national average. A comparison to the nation for 911 operators and 311 agents was not available. Also, comparisons to ratings given by select cities were not available.

In general, ratings of emergency services have remained stable over time, except for satisfaction with 911 operators. A larger proportion of 2011 respondents than 2008 respondents reported satisfaction with 911 operators (94% reporting that they were satisfied or very satisfied in 2011 versus 88% in 2008).

Satisfaction with Public Education in Minneapolis

In 2011, two new questions were added to the survey to gather resident opinions about public education (Kindergarten through 12th grade) in Minneapolis. While 54% of respondents reported satisfaction with public education in Minneapolis, 46% thought it had declined in the two years prior to the 2011 survey administration. Almost equal proportions were very satisfied and very dissatisfied. About a third thought public education had remained the same over the last two years, while a quarter thought it had improved and two in five thought it had declined. About three times as many respondents thought it had declined a lot as opposed to those who felt it had improved a lot (13% versus 4%).

Approximately a quarter of respondents reported “don’t know” when asked to rate their level of satisfaction with public education in Minneapolis and their perceptions of whether or not the quality of public education in Minneapolis has improved over the last two years.

Residents living in the Central community planning district were less satisfied with public education in Minneapolis than were those living in other areas of the city. Owners were less satisfied with public education in the city than were renters. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

Satisfaction with City Services

Survey participants were read a list of services provided by the City of Minneapolis government and asked to rate their level of satisfaction or dissatisfaction with each. At least half of all respondents said that they were satisfied or very satisfied with each service from the list, except for street repair (40% gave positive ratings). Nearly all respondents reported satisfaction with fire protection and sewer services (97% and 96% reporting satisfied or very satisfied, respectively). About 9 in 10 respondents reported satisfaction with providing park and recreation services (92%), animal control services (91%), garbage collection and recycling programs (89%), protecting health and wellbeing of residents (90%), preparing for disasters (89%), providing quality drinking water (88%) and police services (88%).

For the first time in 2011, residents were asked to rate their satisfaction with snow removal. Two-thirds respondents (67%) gave positive ratings and very few (8%) were “very dissatisfied.” Please note that 57% of respondents reported “don’t know” when asked to rate this service.

Also note that a high proportion of respondents said “don’t know” when asked to rate the quality of disaster preparedness (31%), affordable housing development (28%), repairing alleys (23%), dealing with problem businesses and unkempt properties (21%), animal control services (21%) and mortgage foreclosure assistance (63%). Results appearing in the report body have removed “don’t know” responses for discussion of responses only of those who had an opinion. A complete set of frequencies for each survey question can be found in Appendix III: Complete Set of Frequencies.

Twelve of 20 services were compared to National Research Center’s national database. Affordable housing development services received ratings that were much higher than the national average, providing park and recreation services and animal control services received ratings similar to the national benchmark and ratings for keeping streets clean were lower than average. Eight services were rated much below the national benchmark: fire protection and emergency medical response, providing sewer services, garbage collection and recycling programs, providing quality drinking water, police services, cleaning up graffiti, snow removal, repairing streets.

Six of the 20 services were compared to select cities¹¹ from NRC’s database. Keeping streets clean and animal control services were rated similarly to ratings given in select cities and four services (providing quality drinking water, police services, repairing streets, affordable housing development) received ratings much below the select cities average.

When comparing results by community planning district, Near North residents tended to give lower satisfaction ratings than did respondents living in other districts, except for ratings of drinking water. People of color and renters were less likely to give high marks to City services when asked to rate their satisfaction with each service than were other residents. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

In general, quality ratings of Minneapolis City services remained stable from 2008 to 2011. Revitalizing Downtown Minneapolis received slightly more positive ratings in the current iteration than in 2008. Ratings of satisfaction of the City’s efforts to protect the health and well-being of residents; police services; protecting the environment, including air, water and land; cleaning up graffiti; and affordable housing development showed an upward trend since 2005.

It is important to note that in 2003 and 2001, residents were asked how satisfied they were with the City's efforts at providing the service, while the 2011, 2008 and 2005 surveys asked residents the extent to which they were satisfied or dissatisfied with the new way that the City provides each service. Also, “affordable housing development” was worded as “preserving and providing affordable housing for low-income residents” in 2001 and 2003 and “Revitalizing neighborhoods” was worded as “revitalizing neighborhood commercial areas” in 2001 and 2003. In prior years, street and alley repair were combined. Snow removal was added to the list in 2011.

Question wording differed between survey years. In 2003 and 2001, residents were asked how satisfied they were with the City's efforts at providing the service. Also, "affordable housing development" was worded as "preserving and providing affordable housing for low-income residents" in 2001 and 2003 and "Revitalizing neighborhoods" was worded as "revitalizing neighborhood commercial areas" in 2001 and 2003.

"Repairing streets" and "Repairing alleys" were combined in survey years previous to 2011; "snow removal" was added in 2011.

Prioritization of City Services

After rating their satisfaction with City services, residents were asked to rate the importance of each service using a 5-point scale with 5 representing “extremely important” and 1 equaling “not at all important.” At the top of the list were: fire protection and emergency medical response (78% rating as extremely important), providing quality drinking water (69%), and police services (66%). Animal control services were thought to be less important by survey participants. Fewer than 10% of respondents rated each service as “not at all important.”

Respondents to the 2011 survey in lower percents rated the following services as important compared to 2008 survey participants: protecting the environment, including air, water and land; garbage collection and recycling programs; providing park and recreation services; revitalizing neighborhoods; preparing for disasters; keeping streets clean; affordable housing development; dealing with problem businesses and unkempt properties; revitalizing Downtown; mortgage foreclosure assistance; cleaning up graffiti; and animal control services, averaging about an 8% decrease from 2008 to 2011. Despite the change in importance ratings, the rank order of service importance was largely the same in 2011 and 2008.

It should be noted that the scale used in 2003 and 2001 was a 10-point scale. Also, question wording differed in 2001, where residents were asked “how much attention” each service should get. In prior years, street and alley repair were combined. Snow removal and 311 services were added to the list in 2011.

Also, quality drinking water and sewer services were combined into one category on the 2003 questionnaire. In 2001, residents were asked how much attention each service should get.

"Repairing streets" and "Repairing alleys" were combined in survey years previous to 2011; snow removal and 311 services were added in 2011.

Balancing Satisfaction and Priorities

Most government services are considered to be important, but when competition for limited resources demands that efficiencies or cutbacks be instituted, it is wise not only to know what services are deemed most important to residents' satisfaction, but which services among the most important are perceived to be delivered with the lowest quality. It is these services – more important services delivered with lower satisfaction – to which attention needs to be paid first (see Figure 29: Balancing Satisfaction and Priorities on the following page).

To identify the services perceived by residents to have relatively lower satisfaction at the same time as relatively higher importance, all services were ranked from highest perceived satisfaction to lowest perceived satisfaction and from highest perceived importance to lowest perceived importance. While most services were rated as important and with high quality, some services were in the top half of both lists (higher satisfaction and higher importance); some were in the top half of one list but the bottom half of the other (higher satisfaction and lower importance or lower satisfaction and higher importance) and some services were in the bottom half of both lists.

Ratings of importance were compared to ratings of satisfaction as well as to benchmark comparisons. Services were classified as “more important” if 71% or more of respondents gave an importance rating of “4” or “5” – extremely important). Services were rated as “less important” if fewer than 71% of respondents gave an importance rating of “4” or “5.” Services receiving a “satisfied” or “very satisfied” rating by 85% or more of respondents were considered of “higher satisfaction” and those receiving a “satisfied” or “very satisfied” rating by fewer than 85% of respondents were considered “lower satisfaction.” Services above the national benchmark were typed in green; similar were yellow and red was below. If a comparison was not available, the service was typed in blue.

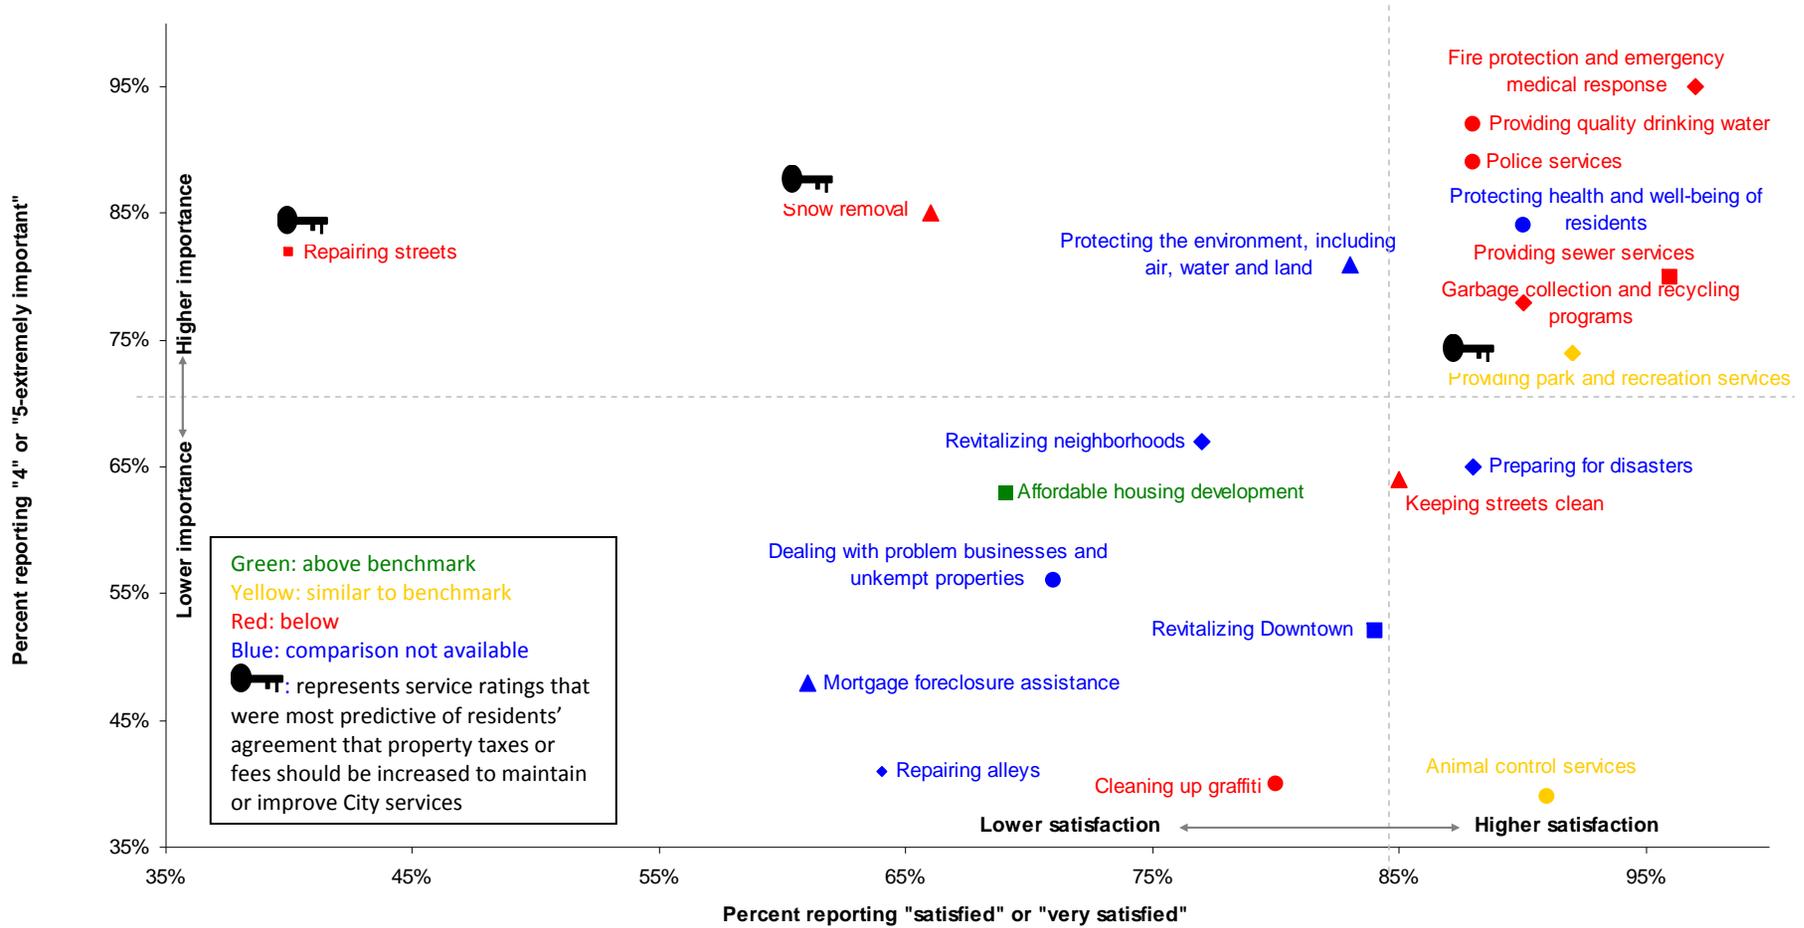

Key Driver Analysis

As is found in many jurisdictions, the services identified by residents as the most important were the core health and safety services such as police, fire, trash collection and drinking water. Because these services tend to be considered the most important everywhere in the U.S., it can be especially illuminating to dig deeper, to identify services that are the best predictors of whether residents would support a tax increase to maintain or improve services. NRC performed a Key Driver Analysis (KDA) which measures the strength of the relationship between service ratings and willingness to support a tax increase. The services most closely related to that willingness to pay are considered key drivers and are represented by this key () in the graphic. So, the residents who gave higher ratings to the key drivers were more likely to support a tax increase to maintain or improve services, but those who gave lower ratings to the key drivers were less likely to support a tax increase to maintain or improve services. The key drivers for Minneapolis were snow removal, street repair and providing parks and recreation services, together a subset of the services self-reported to be important that are worth greater staff and council focus.

Not only are some “important” services more essential targets for study or improvement – the key drivers – but the ratings of some important services tend always to be better than the ratings of others – irrespective of community. For example, fire and police ratings always are receive better ratings than street repair or snow removal. To help identify where ratings are better or worse than should be expected, a comparison is made to resident ratings of those services in other locales. The higher importance services that rated lower compared to other places included: fire protection and emergency medical response, providing quality drinking water, police services, garbage collection and recycling services, snow removal and street repair.

Because snow removal and street repair were both below the benchmark and were key drivers (while the other key driver, providing parks and recreation services was similar to the benchmark) their improvement is likely the best place to focus resources to have the biggest payoff in resident willingness to pay for better or sustained service.

Property Taxes

When asked the extent to which they agreed or disagreed that property taxes or fees should be increased to maintain or improve City services, about half (53%) of respondents agreed with this statement, with 12% in strong agreement. A higher proportion of respondents strongly disagreed with this statement (17%) than did those who strongly agreed (12%) with it.

While the proportion of respondents agreeing that property taxes or fees should be increased to maintain or improve City services was similar between 2011 and 2008, there has been a small decline in support for this idea over time. However, the question was asked differently in 2011, 2008 and 2005 than in 2001 or 2003, so the decline in recent support is not significant. The comparison across years required a calculation described in the footnote to Figure 31 on the following page.

Powderhorn, Nokomis, Northeast and Southwest residents were less likely to agree that property taxes should be increased to maintain or improve City services than were residents living in other areas of the city. Older residents (age 55 and older), those reporting a longer length of residency (20 years or more) and respondents who own their homes were less likely than other respondents to agree that property taxes should be increased to maintain or improve City services. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

To what extent do you agree or disagree that property taxes or fees should be increased to maintain or improve City services?

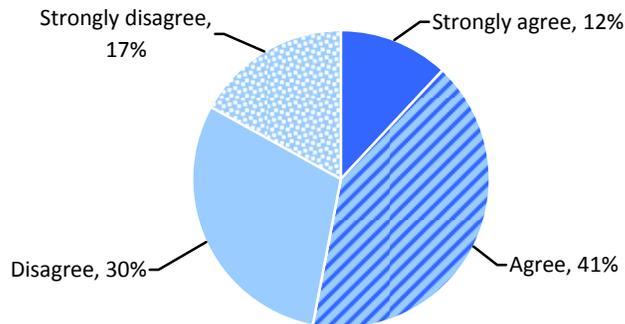

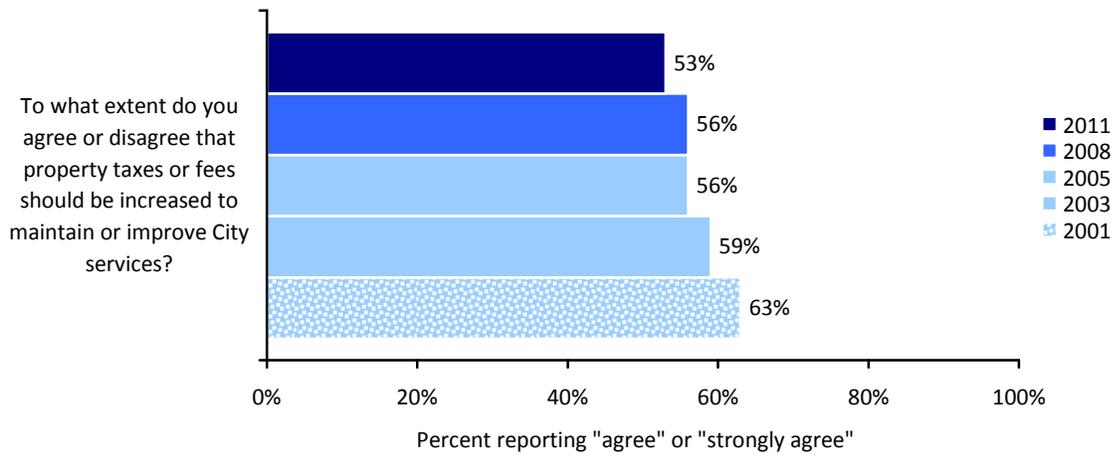

Figure 31: Agreement with Property Tax Increases to Maintain or Improve City Services Compared Over Time

The surveys in 2001 and 2003 provided a list of 14 (2001) to 17 (2003) City services and asked residents how much they agreed or disagreed with a property tax increase to maintain or improve each service. The 2011, 2008 and 2005 surveys simply asked whether residents agreed or disagreed that property taxes should be increased to maintain or improve services in general. Though the data are not directly comparable, the "agree" and "strongly agree" responses were summed for each service in 2001 and 2003, and then an average across the set of services in the two years was calculated. This average is shown in the comparison chart above.

Community Engagement

Community Participation

Residents were asked to respond to a series of questions related to community engagement. As in 2008, about 9 in 10 respondents reported that they are likely to vote in the next election for mayor and city council in November 2013, with 72% stating that they were very likely to vote.

The 8% of respondents who reported they were unlikely to vote in the next election for Mayor and City Council were asked to give reasons that they most likely would not participate. This was an open-ended question where respondents were able to give any answer. Potential categories of response were available to interviewers; they selected the one that best fit each respondent's stated issue. Many respondents mentioned "other" items that could not be coded into a specific category. About one in five (17%) said they did not have any interest in voting in the 2013 election. Other responses pertained to lack of awareness on how to vote or having a belief that voting would not make a difference. Five percent said they were too busy to vote.

Survey respondents were asked how likely or unlikely they would be to use various approaches to try to influence a City decision on an issue they cared about. About 7 in 10 respondents reported that they would be somewhat or very likely to attend a community meeting and to contact an elected official. About two-thirds mentioned that they would be likely to contact a neighborhood group or City staff. Fewer respondents reported that they would be at least somewhat likely to work with a group not affiliated with the City (52%) or join a City advisory group (30%).

The proportion of respondents reporting that they would be likely to contact an elected official was similar in 2011 and 2008, while fewer 2011 respondents than 2008 respondents reported that they would work with a group not affiliated with the City to try to influence a City decision.

The respondents who answered “somewhat” or “very” unlikely to three or more of the scenarios in the previous question were asked to give unprompted reasons why they would be less likely to participate in City government decision-making. Nearly 3 in 10 respondents were unable to highlight their reasons. Two in five of the remaining respondents (41%) reported having “no time” to participate and one in five mentioned having “no interest” (19%). While the proportion of respondents mentioning that they were not aware of participation options has declined since 2005, the proportion of respondents reporting no interest or that it wouldn’t change results is increasing over time. The relative order of responses in 2011 is similar to 2005.

“Other” responses were not recorded and not available for analysis. Total may exceed 100% as respondents were able to choose more than one response.

This question was asked only of respondents who said they were somewhat or very unlikely to use three or more approaches in the previous question.

This question was not asked in 2003 or 2001. N=524

City Government Performance

Residents participating in the survey were asked to give their opinions about Minneapolis City government performance, using a very good to poor scale. At least 6 in 10 respondents gave good or very good ratings for each statement about City government. In general, government performance ratings mostly trended upward over time.

When compared to the nation, quality ratings for providing meaningful opportunities for citizens to give input on important issues received ratings above average, while ratings for providing value for tax dollars were below the national benchmark. The overall direction that the City is taking was rated similarly to other jurisdictions across the country. The City received below average ratings when compared to select cities¹² from the database for the overall direction the City is taking and similar ratings for the value for tax dollars paid.

Southwest residents tended to give lower ratings when asked to rate Minneapolis City government performance than did other residents. Younger residents, residents of color, those reporting their ethnicity to be Latino/Hispanic and residents who own their homes were more likely to give positive ratings to Minneapolis government performance than were their counterparts. (See Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions.)

Also, "affectional preference" was worded as "sexual orientation" in 2003 and 2001.

The 14 respondents who reported experiencing discrimination “in dealing with the City” were asked which department was involved. The responses were unprompted. Three respondents said that police were involved, three mentioned Public Works and one mentioned Human Resources. Five respondents gave “other” responses that could not be grouped with the pre-existing list of potential responses. The relative order of City departments mentioned as being responsible for discrimination in 2011 was similar to the order in 2008. Police remained at the top of the list. This question was not asked in 2001.

Appendix IV: Detailed Survey Methodology

Developing the Interview Script

The Minneapolis Resident Survey was first administered in 2001. While some survey questions have been modified over time, residents typically have been asked their perspectives about the quality of life in the city, their use of City amenities, their opinion on policy issues facing the City and their assessment of City service delivery. Other than a few additions to the current survey, the instrument was almost identical to the survey instrument used in 2008. The instrument averaged about 20 minutes in length.

Sample Selection

A company specializing in phone survey services conducted the interviewing, purchased a random digit dial sample (RDD) where part of the sample was geocoded up-front using reverse directory look-up. Phone numbers of Minneapolis residents were randomly selected for interviewing. Once interviews were completed using the RDD list, those that had respondent address information were geocoded to determine in which of 11 community planning districts a respondent resided. The pre-geocoded list was used at the end of data collection to meet quotas set by community planning district.

If records were unable to be geocoded, they were manually examined to see if the community planning district could be identified from the information in the record. Failing obvious identification, a reverse phone directory was used to generate address information for numbers with incomplete or inaccurate information.

Quotas

An overall quota of at least 95 completed interviews was obtained for each of the 11 community planning districts within the City of Minneapolis. Additional quota systems based on racial groups and cell phone users were used.

Survey Administration and Response Rate

The survey was administered by a company specializing in phone survey services, and the data were recorded electronically using a Computer-Assisted Telephone Interviewing system (CATI).¹³ Phone calls were made from February 1, 2011 to March 10, 2011. A majority of the interviews was completed during the evening hours, although calls were made on the weekend and during weekdays also. All phone numbers were dialed at least eight times before replacing with another number, with at least one of the attempts on either a weekend or weekday. Interviewers who spoke Spanish, Vietnamese, Somali, Hmong, Lao and Oromo were available for this survey; 12 surveys were conducted in Spanish, one in Hmong, one in Vietnamese, one in Oromo and four in Somali. No interviews were conducted in Vietnamese. About a quarter (279) of the completed interviews were conducted with residents of color and a similar proportion (271) were conducted with cell phone users. Although TTY capabilities were offered, no surveys were completed by TTY users.

A total of 28,787 phone numbers were dialed during the survey administration. Some of these numbers are considered ineligible¹⁴ for the survey. Of the approximately 5,190 households called, 1,172 completed interviews providing a response rate of 23%. Approximately 863 households refused the survey.

¹³ CATI is a software program that automatically dials phone numbers, logs dispositions and records responses to completed interviews.

¹⁴ Disconnected, fax/data line, or business phone numbers were not included as eligible households. For 8,936 phone numbers where the eligibility status of the household was unknown, 18% were estimated to be eligible. This proportion was assumed to hold for those households not contacted, or where the household refused, and therefore prevented knowing the eligibility status, and only 18% of these numbers were included in the final response rate calculation.

The dispositions of the numbers dialed during the survey are listed in the table on the following page.

Survey Processing (Data Entry)

Use of a CATI system means that all collected data were entered into the dataset at the time of the interview. Skip patterns were programmed into CATI so interviewers were automatically “skipped” to the appropriate question based on the individual responses being given. Before the data were analyzed, an in-depth cleaning of the data was conducted as part of the standard quality control procedures.

Precision of Estimates

It is customary to describe the precision of estimates made from surveys by a “level of confidence” (or margin of error). The 95 percent confidence level for the survey is generally no greater than plus or minus three percentage points around any given percent reported for the entire sample (1,172 completed interviews). For each community planning district from the survey, the margin of error rises to as much as plus or minus 10% for a sample size of 95 (in smallest) to plus or minus 9% for 129 completed surveys (in largest). Where estimates are given for subgroups, they are less precise. Generally the 95 percent confidence interval is plus or minus five percentage points for samples of about 400 to 1000 and plus or minus three percentage points for samples as small as 100.

¹⁵ Estimate of e is based on proportion of eligible households among all numbers for which a definitive determination of status was obtained (a very conservative estimate).

¹⁶ The response rate was calculated as $1/((I+P) + (R+NC+O) + e(UH+UO))$.

The relationship between sample size and precision (the 95 percent confidence interval or margin of error) is shown in the table to the side. Though the margin of error decreases as sample size increases, higher cost and diminishing benefit often prohibit sample sizes larger than 1,500 to 2,000, with resident survey samples most commonly in the range of 400 to 1,000.

Sample Size	Margin of Error

400	5%
800	3.5%
1,000	3%

2,000	2.2%

Weighting the Data

The demographic characteristics of the survey sample were compared to those found in the U.S. Census Bureau, 2007-2009 American Community Survey estimates (and City estimates for each of the 11 community districts) for the City of Minneapolis and were statistically adjusted to reflect the larger population when necessary. Other discrepancies between the whole population and the sample were also aided by the weighting due to the intercorrelation of many socioeconomic characteristics.

The variables used for weighting were respondent gender, age, ethnicity, housing tenure (rent or own) and geographic location (community planning district). This decision was based on:

- The disparity between the survey respondent characteristics and the population norms for these variables
- The saliency of these variables in differences of opinion among subgroups
- The historical profile created and the desirability of consistently representing different groups over the years

The primary objective of weighting survey data is to make the survey sample reflective of the larger population of the community. This is done by: 1) reviewing the sample demographics and comparing them to the population norms from the most recent Census or other sources and 2) comparing the responses to different questions for demographic subgroups. The demographic characteristics that are least similar to the Census and yield the most different results are the best candidates for data weighting. A third criterion sometimes used is the importance that the community places on a specific variable. For example, if a jurisdiction feels that accurate race representation is key to staff and public acceptance of the study results, additional consideration will be given in the weighting process to adjusting the race variable.

A special software program using mathematical algorithms is used to calculate the appropriate weights. A limitation of data weighting is that only 2-3 demographic variables can be adjusted in a single study. Several different weighting “schemes” are tested to ensure the best fit for the data. The results of the weighting scheme are presented in the table on the following page.

Data Analysis

The results were analyzed by National Research Center, Inc. staff using the Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS). For the most part, frequency distributions are presented in the body of the report. A complete set of frequencies for each survey question is presented in Appendix III: Complete Set of Frequencies.

Also included are crosstabulations of select survey questions (see Appendix II: Crosstabulations of Select Survey Questions). Chi-square or ANOVA tests of significance were applied to these breakdowns of selected survey questions. A “p-value” of 0.05 or less indicates that there is less than a 5% probability that differences observed between groups are due to chance; or in other words, a greater than 95% probability that the differences observed in the selected categories of our sample represent “real” differences among those populations. Where differences between subgroups are statistically significant, they are marked with grey shading in the appendices.
